before the arrival of the railroad, much of texas was isolated and landlocked. frustrated with poorly built roads and a lack of navigable rivers, texas was forced to build its first railroad. In 1850 the first track was laid. houston, the state's most inner point with year-round water transportation to the gulf, was chosen as the hub for the texas system. on the eve of the civil war, the gulf coast web of railroads, all centered around houston, accounted for 90% of the state's tracks. by 1900 texas was the state with the most miles laid and by 1910, houston was host to 17 railroads, thus becoming the city "where 17 railroads meet the sea."
